Columbia alums perform in Kanye West Soldier Field event and reflect on how they got there

By Gabrielle Russell, Contributing Writer

From stepping onto campus for the first time ready to pursue a degree in music to almost not graduating due to financial setbacks, gaining the opportunity to dance on stage with Kanye West was just the icing on the cake for Deshawn Carthen.

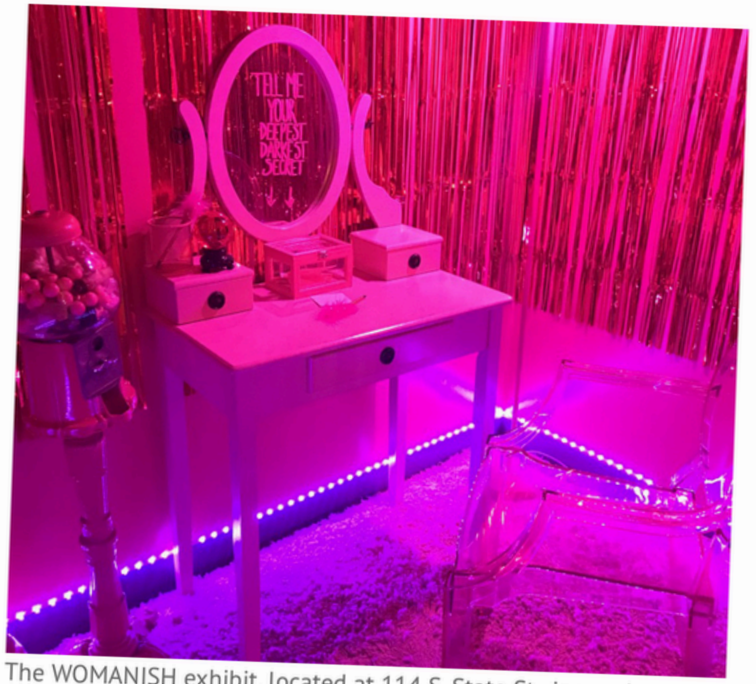

Carthen and fellow Columbia alum Daniel "NDPNDNT" Weisberg, recently discussed their roles in West's "DONDA" listening party held Aug. 26 at Soldier Field. The album is a tribute to the performer's mother, Donda West, a Chicago State University professor who died in 2007.

For NDPNDNT, Weisberg's stage name, Columbia kept him in Chicago longer, as opposed to going to colleges somewhere out-of-state, which helped him meet his mentors that inspired his career.

NDPNDNT graduated Columbia in 2018 with a bachelor's degree in music business management. Since then he has been working on his own music as a hip-hop rapper and is currently working on an album. NDPNDNT wears many hats in his career; he's a songwriter, an actor, a model and professional dancer. NDPNDNT has also made TV appearances, conducted radio interviews and performed at music festivals.

I LOVE LUCCI...VEE

BY GABRIELLE LONDON, FRESHMAN, COLUMBIA COLLEGE CHICAGO

Lucci Vee, who knows us folks from the Oxygen Network reality show "Bad Girls Club: Maniac," has been everywhere but off the radar. Currently working on her new mixtape "I Love Lucci," she says her goal for the album is for it to sound different from her last two. The latest selection is going to be completely different, includes all original music, and showcases more of her heart and soul.

Her name Lucci Vee comes from Susan Lucci, an American soap opera actress ("All My Children"), and Vee came from vixen because her stage name used to be Sweetee Vixen. Lucci basically means sweet, like Gucci with an "L."

Not from the Chicago area, the D.M.V (D. C., Maryland, and Virginia area) native still knows how to bring her Virginia flow and mix it with her Chicago style.

Doing music since she was little, she started out singing then grew into rapping just to play around until her friends told her she really could rap. With the extra exposure she has now being on a reality show, some tried to write her off as more of a reality star than a rapper. "Eventually people will realize what it is," she responded to the doubters.

Even though she is often compared to Nicki Minaj, Teyana Taylor and Azealia Banks, Lucci Vee still found ways to set herself apart from the stereotypical female rapper of today. On every track she raps differently and she changes her flow up. She believes people unjustifiably judge all female rappers the same, but she respects other female artists and listens to many of them.

Inspired by such rappers like Lil Wayne, Lil Kim, Ini, Lyte, Queen Latifah and Roxanne Shante, just to name a few, Lucci Vee taught herself how to rap. "It comes naturally," she said, "but there are certain fundamentals that you need to learn in order to be a good rapper." She believes the female rappers she listened to had the best flows and stage performance and that's what she took from them.

Unsigned, Lucci Vee has a crew named Wolfpack. It's a label, a team, and a family to her. She compares it to their own version of Young Money, but they have more than just artists. They have people who do web design, photography and DJ. It is a group of talented individuals ready to take over the world.

Lucci Vee works with a lot of Chicago artists, but right now she would like to w... with A$AP Rocky, Trinidad Jame$ and 2 C... eventually Lil Wayne.

Lucci Vee eventually found her ... doing everything ... spreading the word, epito... her own sign... personality. "Fire here ... this game," ... explained.
